In the first comprehensive study of the relationship between music and language from the standpoint of cognitive neuroscience, Aniruddh D. Patel challenges the widespread belief that music and language are processed independently. Since Plato's time, the relationship between music and language has attracted interest and debate from a wide range of thinkers. Recently, scientific research on this topic has been growing rapidly, as scholars from diverse disciplines, including linguistics, cognitive science, music cognition, and neuroscience are drawn to the music-language interface as one way to explore the extent to which different mental abilities are processed by separate brain mechanisms. Accordingly, the relevant data and theories have been spread across a range of disciplines. This volume provides the first synthesis, arguing that music and language share deep and critical connections, and that comparative research provides a powerful way to study the cognitive and neural mechanisms underlying these uniquely human abilities. Generalized Anxiety Disorder occurs in approximately 4% of the population and is characterized by excessive uncontrollable worry about everyday things. The constant worry can be overwhelming and interfere with daily activities. The symptoms of Generalized Anxiety Disorder may include:

- Feeling nervous, anxious, or on edge most of the time.
- Feeling restless or having difficulty sitting still.
- Feeling easily fatigued.
- Difficulty concentrating or mind going blank.
- Irritability.
- Muscle tension or aches.
- Excessive sweating.
- Sense of danger or impending doom.
- Recurring thoughts about the future.
- Difficulty controlling worry.

If you suspect you may have Generalized Anxiety Disorder, it is important to seek help from a healthcare professional. They can provide a proper diagnosis and recommend treatment options, which may include medication, therapy, or a combination of both.
